

Marry Poppins

Sometimes we feel we are children in need of some grown-up support, and who better to provide it than the practically perfect nanny in Marry Poppins (1964)? ~~This musical fantasy film directed by~~ Directed by Robert Steven, this musical fantasy film stars the elegant Julie Andrews as Marry Poppins and Dick Van Dyke in the role of Bert, a cockney jack-of-all-trades, and Marry Poppins's closest friend.

The film shows what happens when Mr Banks, the father of two rowdy children, ~~tears~~^{tears} up (into pieces) the advertisement his children wrote about a nanny and puts it ~~in~~ⁱⁿ the fireplace, which then magically floats up into the air. The children wrote their own ~~adver~~ advertisement, for they were deeply disappointed with ~~their father's adver~~^{the advertisement their} father ~~published~~^{published} wrote. Surprisingly enough, a magical ~~nannies~~ nanny flies out of the ~~windy~~ⁱⁿ London skies and descends into their home in response to the children's advertisement. The question is - can the spirited nanny really turn life upside down in the dysfunctional family with the help of her friend Bert, who ~~cheerfully~~ gleefully displays comedy gifts, dancing and singing?

Julie Andrews as Marry Poppins was an utter delight to watch, and the supporting cast was nothing short of ~~pre~~ perfection. The catchy and fun musicals add to the film's sizeable feelgood ~~factor~~.

With Julie enchanting her crystalline ~~voice~~ voice on and Dick Van Dyke demonstrating his woeful cockney ~~accent~~ accent, these classics were simply unforgettable. ~~Not to mention the~~ ~~the~~ jaunty animation and the oscar-winning ~~acting~~ which ~~nearly~~^{surely} steals the show. I loved the way it was used in scenes to make it more lifelike.

If you want some tender loving care, go for the Marry Poppins. One thing we all look for will surely be spooned out by this ~~gem~~^{theatrical} gem: laughter.

What a masterpiece this is!

Masha Allah, top-notch in every aspect!
