Main Body Paragraph 1 (Keeping animals in zoos)

Firstly, one thing I abhor about owning a pet is the way they cause infectious diseases. Undeniably, animals such as dogs and cats are used to living in unhygienic places and have repulsive habits. This means that touching and caring for those cute canines and furry felines we will make us more susceptible to harrowing diseases such as rabies and hookworm, for example, eventually putting our very lives at risk. Pet ownership certainly is an invitation to grievous diseases.

Main Body Paragraph 1 (building a factory)

To begin with, it is my firm belief that construction of a factory will aggravate the issue of pollution. It is as plain as a pikestaff that industrial waste and noxious smoke released by the factories will contaminate rivers and the atmosphere respectively. As a matter of consequence, congenital disabilities and other health issues such as respiratory diseases like bronchitis will become commonplace. Unquestionably, a factory is a prime source of pollutants and effluents.

Conclusion (building a factory)

To conclude, it is my unwavering contention that it is high time we all opposed the proposal to build a factory in our town underlying the fact that it will dump the atmosphere with contaminants and spoil the pristine beauty of nature.

Laisha – Kurin'bee School

Main Body Paragraph 1 (English as a global language)

First and foremost, what I love about the use of English as a global language is the way it can eliminate the need to learn foreign languages. Without a shadow of doubt, people now have to spend an abundance of money and undergo immense amount of struggle to learn other languages to facilitate business and personal dealings. This means that use of a common language can help us save a great deal of money and time. The dominance of English can certainly make our lives more hassle-free.

Conclusion (English as a global language)

To conclude, I vehemently believe it is high time that we embraced the idea of using English as a global language having the fact that it can remove communication barriers and the need to learn other languages. It is never too late to start using a lingua franca, is it?

Main Body Paragraph 1 (abolishing examinations)

First and foremost, what I adore about the idea of abolishing examinations is the way that it will reduce the stress levels of students. It is beyond all disputes that when the exams are around the corner, students have to sacrifice their sleep and plunge into an abyss of pressure and apprehension. As a matter of consequence, exam stress can lead to mental illnesses such as depression and anxiety, not to mention worsening pre-existing severe health conditions. There is only one way to safeguard students' health: abolishing exams.

Conclusion (abolishing examinations)

In a nutshell, it is my strident contention that it is high time the government eased the burden of exams underlying the fact that it jeopardizes our health and takes away the fun in learning.

Hishama – Bilehdhoo School

Main Body Paragraph 1 (building a factory)

To begin with, I vehemently believe that building a factory will provide job opportunities to the local people. It is a no-brainer that the new factory will provide career opportunities for job-seekers in our community. This means that their living standard will improve immensely as they get a steady source of income. Undoubtedly, a new factory will reduce unemployment in the locality.

Conclusion (building a factory)

To sum up, I am of opinion that greenlight should be given to the proposal of building a new factory as it will provide new career prospects for our citizens. After all, who does not want to have a stable job?

Introduction (classroom rules)

What if students were permitted to be wild and unruly in the classroom? Like many of you, I believe classroom rules are imperative for several reasons.

Main Body Paragraph 1 (classroom rules)

To begin with, I strongly believe classroom rules will instil good manners in students. Undoubtedly, these rules enforce students to behave in a certain way like getting permission before speaking in the class. This means that these students' behaviour would be modified desirably, helping them grow up as respectable adults. Classrooms rules are surely indispensable to teach good behavioural traits.

Asaala – Bilehdhoo School

Main Body paragraph 1 (abolishing exams)

First and foremost, one thing I admire about the proposal to abolish examination is the way it will motivate the students to learn effectively. It is as plain as a pike staff that when the stressful exams are terminated, students could avoid perturbing about exams that are often described as 'do or die'. As a consequence, students can manage their valuable time learning and exploring more about their studies as well engaging in cooperative learning without having to worry about an exam. Eliminating the examinations can indeed stimulate students to study smarter, not harder.

Conclusion (abolishing exams)

All in all, it is my unwavering contention that schools should abolish examinations underlining the fact that it will facilitate more productive learning. Is the idea of assessing a few skills worth the torment and jitters it causes?

Saina – Dhigurashu School

Main Body paragraph 1 (Impact of Technology)

First and foremost, it is my strong opinion that new technological devices have made parents irresponsible. It is a no-brainer that nowadays parents are preoccupied with their mobile phones as they spend hours scrolling through social media apps, for example. As a result, even young children are being neglected and left to fend for themselves. This not only takes a huge toll on the family ties but also exposes children to all sorts of discipline issues. Technology has certainly made parents heedless of their parental duties.

Malsa – Imaddudin School

Main Body paragraph 1 (abolishing exams)

Firstly, it is my strong belief that exams should be completely abolished as it is a profound source of stress for countless students. It is a no-brainer that the fear of not fulfilling parents' expectations leaves students under overwhelming pressure. As a consequence, it adversely affects their mental health and sometimes it leaves them sleep deprived and traumatised. Simply put, exams are an additional stress for their already chaotic lives.

Conclusion (abolishing exams)

On the whole, I vehemently believe it is high time governments ceased giving exams not only because of the detrimental anxiety it gives birth to but also because of the misconception that ingrained in our society that “exam results define our worth”.

Lam'aa – FAEC

Main Body paragraph 1 (replacing textbooks with tablets)

In the first place, it is my firm belief that the introduction of tablets to the classroom will be a mere distraction. There is not an iota of doubt that with the tempting fun and games available on tablets, student may pay less attention to lessons. Consequently, the chances are that student fray around in their studies. Tablets will surely take away students' focus and attention.

Conclusion (replacing textbooks with tablets)

To conclude, I vehemently believe that the plan to replace textbook with tablets should be aborted as it will derail students from proper learning. I urge the schoolboard to reconsider the proposal and evaluate its detrimental effects to the students.

Yaana Moosa - Faafu Atoll Education Center

Main Body paragraph 1 (recycling plant)

On one hand, it is my firm belief that installing a recycling plant will surely be a massive step to save our environment. There is not an iota of doubt that litters such as empty bottles and cans need not be incinerated or discarded in landfill sites when the recycling facility is established. As a result, it will most assuredly lessen pollution and littering, protecting our very environment for future generations. A recycling plant can ensure a cleaner surrounding for everyone.

Conclusion (recycling plant)

All in all, it is my unwavering contention that installing a recycling plant is a spellbinding idea underlying the fact that it protects our environment and helps in conservation of natural resources. Who wouldn't want to put an end to all the environmental fuss?

Joan – Ghaazee School

Main Body paragraph 1 (mobile phone)

Firstly, it is my categorical belief that mobile phone is an expeditious way of easing our daily duties and responsibilities. It is beyond all disputes that this efficient portable device can do several functions such as texting, banking and so on. This means that we do not have to find a computer to send an important email, for example, thus proving to be extremely handy for people with hectic schedules. As a consequence, it can save our time and relieve a lot of stress and anxiety. A mobile phone indeed makes our lives hassle-free.

Note: This is a small selection of article paragraphs written by some of my students. The aim of this compilation is to demonstrate how the MOJO FORMULA should be applied to write a proper main body paragraph and conclusion for an ESL article. I hope you all find this helpful.
