

Dear Hayley,

How was Tokyo? Enjoyed your holiday, right? You have to tell me all about your trip. Before that, do you know what I was up to this holiday.)

Yes, I must admit, it started off as the worst holiday ever. I was planning to watch telly all day long. Which is why I threw a tantrum when Kate broke the telly. Can you even imagine my situation without it? We were fighting like cats and dogs when my mom asked ~~me~~ about the incident. My sister threw me under the bus. So, I got grounded for a week. How brutal she is!

Left cold by idleness, I mulled over what to do to kill time and ended up joining the football club. I know I only play once in a blue moon, but I wanted to try it out. It turned out the club was practicing for a tournament. I practiced with them day and night. I even went the extra mile and kicked the habit of drinking fizzy and sugary drinks to be at the peak of my fitness. All the hard work paid off during the final match of the tournament. We were neck and neck to the other team and we won as I scored a goal in the nick of time. Couldn't believe it right? Even I jumped out of my skin. I guess every cloud has a silver lining.

know what? I never would've won player of the tournament if the telly wasn't broken. (Yes, you heard it right. I won player of the tournament.) I also learned football can be a good career for me. That was really an indubitable holiday.

Alright, getting late. By the way, don't forget to fill me in about your trip. My inbox is always open.

With love,

Harry

Dear Candice

I was pinched by your email this morning while I was having my daily dose of coffee. Glad to know you're having the time of your life at Atlanta. Can you guess what I was up to in the weekend.

You know my aunt Amelia right? The cool aunt who I used to brag about everytime I call you. Well, as usual, she surprised us with a call, all happy and bubbly, telling us to visit her and her newly opened food court. My jaw dropped open and thought she was such a dimwit to open up a food court out of nowhere. Honestly, I was not surprised at all. She's Kayla and I were pumped to visit her! She's always up to meteoric adventures! But, um - it was kind of a mess there. Her food court had people swarming all over. My airways were blocked just by watching people getting crushed into each other. I, Kayla and I ran to rescue (paw patrol who?) We started helping and as our eyes met with aunt Amelia, she hugged us like she saw us for the first time, and for so long that she planted her scent along with us! Serving the customers, spilling ice-cream all over ourselves, gulping down all the food into our mouths like elephants, altogether it was a disastrous, hilarious trip! It was a shame not having you there. Why don't you come with us on our next trip? It'll be all fun!

Oh no! It's time to hit the sack or else with my mom's temper, you'll find me 6 feet under ground! Do reply me. Bye!

Love,

Nina
